Southwark

Southwark stretches from the internationally renowned cultural quarter along the South Bank of the Thames at its north end, with more urban Bermondsey, Peckham and Camberwell at its centre down to leafy Dulwich at its Southern tip. It incorporates 5 major parks and open spaces suitable for and large scale events.

With the highest proportion of 25-40 year olds living in London, Southwark is the youngest and arguably most vibrant place in the city.

Southwark is an inspiring, progressive and entrepreneurial borough. It's home to many of London's most iconic attractions including London Bridge, The Shard, Tate Modern, Shakespeare's Globe, Borough Market, Imperial War Museum, Dulwich Picture Gallery and new cultural hub Peckham and Bermondsey.

Southwark Park

Southwark Park is situated within a short walk from the Jubilee Line, London Overground and main line stations. It also falls within a district with the highest proportion of 25-40 year olds in London, making it the perfect location to host large scale events.

It currently hosts Southwark's annual fireworks display and Bermondsey Carnival

Southwark Park is an English Heritage, Grade II listed amenity. Originally designed by Alexander McKenzie it covers over 63 acres

In 2015 the park was granted £5million to redevelop key areas, this has resulted large areas of underused land being brought back into use.
